Last Show: Jul 26, 1974 Audition Show: none known

Series Description:

Rod Serling started the groundwork for a new radio series called THE ZERO HOUR, which was to have featured Ray Bradbury's story as the opener. Norman Corwin took over the project and it evolved into a suspense radio drama series hosted by Rod Serling. It was produced by StudioHouse, who also produced The Salvation Army program, "Heartbeat Theatre". Don Hill produced the series.

THE ZERO HOUR was produced in 1973 and featured 5-part stories that ran Monday through Friday, until December of 1973. Each part was approximately 30 minutes long (including commercials). The series was sold to Mutual for syndication. The format was changed to single part shows in 1974, running again 5 days a week, from the end of April through July of 1974. One hundred and thirty episodes were produced, counting each 5-part show as 5 episodes.

The shows in circulation are introduced as "THE ZERO HOUR presented by the HOLLYWOOD RADIO THEATER".

Log Comments:

The 5-part series was syndicated by Mutual and the programs were allowed to be aired when convenient. Therefore, broadcast dates vary around the country. This section of the log is listed in Mutual's suggested ordering. Broadcast dates start on the premier date and continue until completion without break. The single-part show broadcast dates were more tightly defined by Mutual. (The above information is from Dick Judge).

Highbridge Audio (see References section) has released a number of the 5-parters and are available in bookstores. Audio quality of their tapes is excellent, however, they use only the first opening and the last closing from the 5 shows.
